Have you ever sailed between Halulu and Mikania? If you have, you must have seen a big part of ocean, as big as Taiwan. And there are all kinds of garbage on it. Most of the trash is plastic: plastic bags, plastic cups, plastic cans, and a lot more.

You might ask: Where does all the trash come from? Well, most of it comes from the land, by wind or by water. When people are doing fun activities at the ocean, they also throw their trash straight into the sea.

You might also wonder: Where does the trash go in the end? A study shows that some stays in the sea, some swims onto the beaches, and worst of all, some enters seabirds' and sea animals' stomachs. Over the years, the number of dolphins has dropped quickly. From 1950 to 1990, people killed about 20,000 dolphins. It is worrying that children in the future can only see dolphins in the pictures. People believe that they should stop all kinds of dolphin hunting before it is too late.

Some people are trying to stop dolphin hunting all over the world. But they fail to notice one fact: Dolphin hunting was going on for a long time before the number of dolphins went down and became a problem.

Dolphin hunting started as early as 1,000 years ago. This was the way how aboriginals fed their families. They hunted dolphins for meat because almost nothing could grow on their land. They also made dolphin fat into oil and used it to make oil lamps. For a long time, dolphin hunting has become a part of their culture and life.

In fact, aboriginal dolphin hunting is not the thing we should worry about. Of all the dead dolphins over the past forty years, only 10% belonged to it. The other 90% died at the hands of money-making businessmen. When we try to stop all kinds of dolphin hunting, we should think if it is right to ask the aboriginals to give it up. We should ask ourselves: What is the best answer to the problem of dolphin hunting?
